

Countries are regulating competition in digital markets

Countries face similar competition challenges in digital markets. They address them with regional and domestic legislations, most of which are still under development. Legislators should follow shared policy principles defined by an international organisation (e.g., OECD) to ensure international coherence in digital markets.

